

Gene Wolfe"s "The Fifth Head of Cerberus"

The SF-Lovers list — 1 messages, 1 voices, undated

<https://urth.darkrealm.vip/thread/sflovers/16>

Exported from an unofficial mirror of a public mailing list. Copyright in each message remains with the person who wrote it. Email addresses are obscured as `user at host`, the form the original archive published. This file was rebuilt from parsed fields rather than retained headers, so it is faithful in content but not byte-exact.

decvax!yale-com!leichter — undated

"The Fifth Head of Cerberus" consists of three stories, each of which could more or less stand alone - the second, with the same title as the book, was originally published as a novella. (I read it in one of Terry Carr's collections; I don't know where else it might have appeared.) The stories take place on one of two twin colony worlds; their common thread is a single character, a visiting Earth scientist, who is an incidental character in the first story - come to think of it, I guess THAT's the previously published one, the narrator of the second (which is actually a retelling of a myth told by the conjectural (? - but the reason for the "?" is deep in the story) native residents of one of the planets, and the central character in the third.

The book develops slowly. If you really want to get the absolute most out of the first story, read it a little bit at a time over a matter of a couple of days.

Overall, it's a marvelous book. It's beautifully written, much of it being in Wolfe's typical "take some hackneyed style and do something totally unexpected with it". Thus, the first story is very much in the Gothic tradition - terrible family secret, etc.

By all means, give it a read.

-- Jerry