From my classicist friend:

Good heavens, that's a lot of Latin for one short story. What's the story?

Alis volat propriis. He flies on his own wings.

Ab imo pectore. From deep in the heart.

Usus magister est. Experience is a teacher (learning by doing).

[Sole occidere et redire posset] Nobis cum semel occidit brevis lux, nox est perpetua una dormienda. [Suns may set and rise again]; for us, once the short light dies, one eternal night remains for sleeping. (Catullus V... the famous "vivamus mea Lesbia atque amemus," with all the thousands of kisses).

Temporis ars medicina fere est. The healing art is essentially time.

Pax in bello. Peace in war.

Non exaequat victoria caelo. Victory does not make us equal to heaven [the gods].

Nullam est librum tam malum ut non ex aliqua parte prodesset. No book is so bad that it's not useful in some degree.

Omnia fert aetas, animum quoque. Age takes away everything, including the mind. (Virgil, Eclogues IX.51)

Notitia linguarum est prima porta sapientiae. Acquaintance with languages is the first gate of knowledge.

Doctrina sed vim promovet insitam. But teaching increases innate strength (Horace, Odes IV.4)

Placidaque ibi demum morte quievit. Finally he (she) came to rest in peaceful death.
