Folks,

"The Eleventh City" has just appeared in the anthology _Graven Images_, edited by Nancy Kilpatrick and Thomas S. Roche (Ace/Berkley Publishing Group; ISBN: 044100766X; $13.00). The usual disclaimer applies--I have no personal interest in pro- moting the publisher, either of the editors, or anybody else--but since it had been discussed on the list, I thought people might like to know.

The title of the anthology for which "The Eleventh City" was originally written had been _Grotesques_, but either that project folded or the book's title was changed--I don't know which, since I never knew who were to be the editors and publisher of _Grotesques_.

My old query about this story appears below.

Folks,

I bought the anthology _Such a Pretty Face_ (edited by Lee Martindale, available in both hardcover and paperback from Meisha Merlin Publishing) the other day, for the Wolfe story "The Fat Magician" that it contains. The story, which features Sam Cooper, Wolfe's folklorist character, has an introductory note that refers to three other Sam Cooper stories. The first two--"The Nebraskan and the Nereid" and "Lord of the Land"--I'm familiar with, but the third--"The Eleventh City"--I hadn't heard of before and was unable to find despite a search of both my collection and _Locus_ magazine's on-line Indices to Science Fiction.

Does anyone know whether "The Eleventh City" has yet been published, and, if so, where? If it's scheduled for publication later this year, when and where will it appear?

If you don't want to clutter the list with your replies, feel free to write to me directly at millman at us.ncipher.com.

I appreciate any help you have to offer.
