My memory is not what it should be. I'm recalling a story from the Dozois "Year's Best In Science Fiction" I'm wondering if it was written by Wolfe. If not, does anyone in this group recognize it so as to provide me with the author?

A young somewhat embittered woman works in a refugee camp. The refugees are from the future. The future these people are fleeing from is one where people are terrified, enslaved, and tortured by a cruel political system.

Not ringing a bell for me in either Wolfe dept. or YBSF dept. Do you have a sense of what year it was published? Last few years, or several years ago?

No, it's not Wolfe. You're referring to Michael Swanwick's rather brilliant short story "Radiant Doors" (1998).
