hallo!

I finally got around to reading There are Doors, and again I'm stunned that I held off for so long. Not that it was perfect, but it WAS great fun to go through (and then read aloud to my girlfriend until she got intrigued and stole the book from me...).

it is perhaps the only story of his that I can remember thinking that if it had ended earlier would have been fabulous, but in the end was only good. Does anyone else have an opinion on this?
