Exported from an unofficial mirror of a public mailing list. Copyright in each message remains with the person who wrote it. Email addresses are obscured as `user at host`, the form the original archive published. This file was rebuilt from parsed fields rather than retained headers, so it is faithful in content but not byte-exact.

I've been wondering for some time now just how sensitive Tor and Wolfe would be to the use of BotNS text and pictures. I seek two things that could be taken as copyright infringement:

- 1) I want to go up to the local mall and get a t-shirt made with the title page of UotNS on the front (you know, the handsome calligraphy like on the Soldier of Arete cover) and would not like to be confronted by a lawyer the second I put it on.
- 2) It'd be nice if someone or someones could begin a project of typing in the entire BotNS, including the UotNS, so that it would be handy for citation and quoting when a person is authoring e-mail relating to it. This would most certainly be seen as infringement if it was placed on an easily-accessible web page, but I want it for the private use of those who already own the BotNS and are just studying it.
