A few on the list claim they would be interested in getting Mr. Wolfe to participate in a workshop type review. I am a teacher at the high school and community college level, and I used to like it. I've did it for about two and a half years, before I taught the worst bunch of miscreant remedial punks in the history of the world. I got tennis balls in the back of the head, penises scratched in my glassware, and wrongfully accused of negligence for not reporting an instance of sexual harassment (when the girl never came to me and said she was being harassed by other students in the hell class). Now I never want to teach again, and I'm only 25. (Actually that might be my problem - I looked like the students)

I wouldn't want Mr. Wolfe to go through any stress like that again - I'd just rather see him write and stay happy. After a man says the experience was awful and stressful, I wouldn't want to make him repeat it for a fistful of dollars. He's already been screwed for the release dates of his Wizard Knight, I'm sure in a ploy to keep money out of his hands, and I don't think he likes how several magazines are sitting on his stories. I want Mr. Wolfe to be happy and stress free forever, so he can keep working and finish up the soldier series if he wants to.

Just my two cents.
