I can also set one up quite easily on urth.net - my hosting company gives me a big red button that says "WIKI" on it, which I need simply push. I'd be glad to do that if people are interested. However, I won't have time to administer it at all - setting up the initial structure, editing, monitoring for spam and vandalism - so I'd have to ask that others commit to take care of the thing! What do you think?

I'd be glad to handle that, but I couldn't right now- after May I'll have enough spare time I could run that. Of course, if no one else is interested, there's no point. Good wikis are always community-based efforts.

Incidentally, what engine do they provide? Mediawiki, oddmuse, or some engine I've never heard of?

There is a wiki on the Wizard-Knight that died from lack of activity.

I started it at:

<http://www.nhn.ou.edu/cgi-bin/cgiwrap/~kieran/wiki/wolfe?FrontPage>

I would be happy to turn it into a general WolfeWiki. If someone else wants to do a more thorough job though, that would be great.

Hm. I'm not that fond of the old wiki engines; I'd rather use mediawiki just because it's better. But we could definitely use your content to start off the Wizard-Knight section. But I don't see it clearly: what license is your stuff under?
