Does anyone want to defend the theory that Father Inire is an inhumu (and a tree)?

I'm on the road and can't quote chapter and verse...or how it could work,,,but that was always the feeling that I got...just didn't know how to back it up or make it work.

Reminds me of the early scene in BOTLS where the "priest "is fixing the putty on his nose then flies out the window..

no, no. inhumu are not trees. they are the strangling liana vines living off the vanished god trees.
