Agreed Greg, furthermore, the image of a bowling ball resting on a tennis racket (as opposed to a tennis ball) is used to describe a super-dense object's effects on gravity. One such object would be a black hole.

I am not fully swung by your interpretation but I am certainly more in favour of it than the toilet humour...

*The tennis racket that BB1 mentions is a common depiction of the space-time continuum, a grid of "space" upon which rests a ball. This graphical construct has been used countless times to try to aid understanding of the mechanism of gravity.
