The Guardian (UK) has published a list of 1000 "books that everyone should read," and BoTNS made the SF section:

The list is a bit Anglocentric, and (perhaps for that reason) leaves off some writers (Disch, Crowley, Le Guin) that I would consider to be no-brainers; but at least most of the books on it are, in fact, quite good, which isn't always the case with such lists.

Disch makes Moorcock's list of dystopias, while Le Guin makes Susanna Clarke's segment on "imagined worlds".

I don't think those are part of the 1000, though, are they? Actually, it's hard to tell if they're extras or pulled out for special attention. Maybe it will be clearer when the list is complete.
