I was just talking lit with a coworker, and she recommended Dorothy Dunnet's Lymond Chronicles to me. Historical fiction with lots of literary and historical fiction and a lot of obscure vocabulary and a lot of depth is how it was described to me.

anybody here read her? would you second the recommendation?

I read the first book and a half. I enjoyed the first one, got bogged down somewhere in the second and never went back.

I read and enjoyed the first three. I've attempted to read the fourth novel twice, and I fail miserably each time. It's not that it's bad, I just always seem to have another book come around that grabs my interest more, and I abandon it.

I enjoyed them, though I didn't bother following all the intrigue or all of Lymond's cryptic statements, and I could see how one could get a little tired of him.

The detail is astonishing.
