Before the Wolfe interview quote there was a significant camp who argued that there was no conclusive evidence that Dr. Marsch was replaced (Tony were you among them?).

Tony Ellis- No, I was in the camp that pointed out that none of the other theories were very good.

LMAO! Funny. So this is a roundabout way of saying....what? People who thought there was human replacement were not good Wolfe readers? Wolfe is not a good Wolfe reader? Wolfe lied or was confused in his interview?

Or are you now saying that even the theory of Marsch not being replaced is no good. So 5HoC is not a good book? Or it is a good book filled with nothing but bad evidence? Surely you can admit that what satifies you as a good theory is not going to be the same thing which satifies others as a good theory, yes?

Tony, you have a long history of refusing to pin yourself down to anything and subject yourself to criticism. But I admit that even recognizing this, you have confused me here on your stance or lack of one. Is there any hope?

So let's try this one.

There is evidence to support two different theories about the Shadow Children (and even there, I think the evidence for one side is much stronger than the other).

Which of the two Shadow Children theories is much stronger and why?
