Jeff Wilson: But I think I've gotten us off track, getting so wound up in man's inhumanity to man. I need to say that my dad also represents the positive side of obedience in unthinkable things in that despite being raised in small-town Arkansas he still followed orders to risk his life guarding the black students from the white mob at the integration of Central High in Little Rock as a national guardsman.

I've played an advocate in this thread but it was a position role. I quite highly respect the opinions of all who contributed and I think all are correct and valid. Jeff, thanks for telling us that story about your family. It is quite meaningful. I appreciate it and perhaps it makes the perfect note upon which to end this thread
