As a book author, tho never fiction and never with Tor, that generally means that the contracted work has been turned in and the publisher has agreed, yes, we will publish this. It is likely the beginning of the editorial process, though. I'd guess publication is likely still a year away---sometime Spring 2015. This could all be wrong. Trad publishing is SLOW.

With my last book I was absolutely assured that the ABSOLUTE MINIMUM my major NY house could turn an absolutely finished ms---one ready to be formatted and printed, already completely read edited and proofread---into a physical object in stores was four months. (And this was nonfiction essentially about a constantly changing ongoing news story where weeks were of the essence.) And that was when everything about the editorial process was done. Basically, if we don't already see it in a Tor catalog, it's probably 10 months to a year away.

Great news!

Does "accepted" mean that the editing is finished or is that process still ongoing? (Sorry, I'm not up on the specifics of book publishing lingo.)

Any idea of how soon should we expect its release date to be scheduled?

Thanks,
Ed

If it's a standard 300-pager, that's about right.

Being on the publications side myself, I can add that four months is only possible with a perfect manuscript. Since there is no such thing, six months is a much more typical minimum.

RE: posts from the list disappearing. I only subscribe to the Urth Digest, and these arrive in my "Kampanj" folder of my gmail account (campaign), along with store discounts, newsletters and such. Why it has chosen that folder I have no idea; other mail lists I subscribe to wind up in the Forum folder, and those have been dropping out into the spam folder. The structure of these internet beasts can be hazy and arbitrary, to say the least...

Btw: "Labyrinth in the Library" as the title for a new Wolfe book? Sounds like it could be a thesis on J.L. Borges...

I'm not sure that's enough - I have a filter to catch all Urth messages and send them to a Wolfe folder, and still it has happened a lot that I'm half way through one of Marc's messages and it disappears! It's those liberals, I tell you.

Welcome!

Long time lurker here. I've noticed this too, and unfortunately it looks like gmail's spam filter has become more aggressive, since this has been happening with other messages for me. The solution is to set up a filter from Settings > Filters, such that messages sent to urth at lists.urth.net are never marked as spam.

Hope this helps.

Best,
Dimitar

I've been getting that as well. Several times gmail has asked me if I want to forward the message to their crack team to help "improve" things, but the e-mails keep getting dumped in there. Grrrr!!!

It's weird a lot of the urth messages go to spam on me so I just check the archive frequently. Last week it said all the bounces were going to deactivate my account from the urth list unless I reactivated it manually, which I did. Very bizarre. Maybe I should make an urth posting email from a new hosting email address
