Dear all,

I'm looking for someone (or someones) to take over ownership and administation of the WolfeWiki, <https://www.wolfewiki.com> .

I set this up quite a while back now*, and although there's been some fantastic stuff contributed over the period, it has generally more recently got a bit neglected and under-used. I am too busy these days to do much with it, so I feel like a new pair of hands could make some quick and good progress in tidying it up, streamlining the contribution path, encouraging more contributions, updating what needs updating, filling obvious gaps etc.

The project consists of the domain wolfewiki.com, and some hosting, on which is installed the wiki software and the contributed material. I'm happy to hand over ownership of the domain to the new person, and to send the files once you've set up your own hosting for it. (All free of charge of course, including however long is left on the domain registration.)

But -- I'm limited in the amount of handholding etc that I can do when passing it over. So, you do need to have sufficient technical capability to be able to yourself pretty much manage the process of setting it up. This doesn't need you to be an IT whiz -- but it does need you to be familiar with the ins and outs of how to use web hosting, how to install software via FTP, maybe a bit of wrangling with file permissions, etc.

If you're interested, let me know via email, perhaps with a bit of an outline of your experience with managing this sort of thing.

best wishes,

Mo
