Which is not to say I agree with Mr. Borski, just that he's right that Silk's wounds don't fit well as suicide attempt wounds. The picture is sufficiently murky that I'm no longer 100% convinced it was a suicide attempt.

Another possible idea for an attacker, if there was an attacker, is the inhum. Silk's wounds are consistent with an inhum attack. Perhaps Hyacinth's illness was due to inhum attack, and they finally killed her.

I want to get all the possibilities out there, in spite of still believing that a suicide attempt is the most likely explanation.
