alga,

I think you're wrong about the gods being turned off. First, the Trivigauntis do talk to Sphigx, or at least they think they do. The relevant quote is when Siyuf or Saba is turning up her nose at the idea of figuring out the will of the gods from the entrails of animals. She says (paraphrased), "We just ask Sphigx and she tells us." Now, maybe she means the priestesses of Sphigx tell them, but...

In addition, we have evidence that other cities (Wick? Palustria?) have had theophanies since the death of Pas, at least from Quetzal. He mentions the other gods bragging about it in other cities.

(I wish I had a spare set of the books here at work -- I usually write these things while I've got a long compilation running, but I've only got a paperback of _Calde_ here. Then I'd give you page numbers, oodles 'o page numbers. Maybe I'll find time tonight...)

(watch that extra 'a'!)
