Excellent work, Agent Raster (aka Charles Dye)! Quite substantial, providing much food for thought. (And very little room for debate--it looks so conclusive.)

You seem to have done it so easily, too . . . would you like to have the rest of the Writings as your sphere of expertise, tracing down the non-Marcus Aurelius Antoninus passages and allusions? For example, we've been talking about passages relating to the Outsider, then there's source for name Oreb (I think), the opening lines (isn't it something like "Look upon my works and tremble"?), some bits about Kypris, etc. "Q&D" has some raw citations but no paraphrasing or tagging (oh =that's= very useful), so we can help out by whipping up some of the other pieces at least.

Even if you decline to follow this any further, you've provided a solid foundation. Me, I'm one happy camper!
